THE ANCIENT ROOTS: A ROMAN AMPHITHEATRE

The image shows the interior of a stone building, likely a church or a historical structure. The ceiling is a vaulted dome made of dark, irregularly shaped stones. Three large, semi-circular arched windows are set into the upper wall, each with a decorative stone arch above it. The walls are made of light-colored, roughly-hewn stone. In the foreground, the tops of three circular stone structures, possibly altars or pedestals, are visible. The lighting is dramatic, with bright light coming through the windows and deep shadows in the corners and under the arches.
